New Recycling Rules for Business

From 31st March 2025, all workplaces with 10 or more full-time employees in England will need to comply with new recycling regulations designed to improve waste management and sustainability. This includes businesses, care homes, educational institutions, healthcare establishments, places of worship, charity shops, residential hostels, prisons and places used for public meetings.

What does this mean for you?

Aligning with the government's environmental goals, the new legislation will require waste to be separated into four distinct streams:

- Residual waste (non-recyclable waste)
- Food waste
- Paper and cardboard
- Dry recyclables (including glass, metal and plastic)

Whilst this is a major shift in business waste management that aims to reduce landfill waste, it's a huge opportunity for businesses to adopt more sustainable practices in their waste disposal methods.

Become Fully Prepared with SFM's 6 Top Tips

1 Review Waste Practices

Assess your current waste disposal methods early and identify areas that require changes to meet the new regulations.

If you need to invest in more bins, we could help you source containers that will eliminate unwanted odours in your office and reduce health and safety risks.

2 Train Staff

Educating your employees on the new waste separation system and the importance of compliance is crucial at the start – adopt the mean as you go on approach and be the role model for everyone.

3 Work with waste contractors

Waste contractors will be extremely busy in the run up to 31st March so be sure to engage with your waste management providers early so that they can accommodate appropriate collection services for your business.

4 Adopt simpler labelling systems

Use clear and easy-to-understand labels on bins to help staff dispose of waste correctly.

Be sure to communicate with staff that aren't regularly attending your office if you operate a hybrid working model - everyone will need to be fully informed.

If your workforce is multilingual, provide translated labels to facilitate understanding and compliance.

5 Add extra bins

Increase the number of waste bins to accommodate separate streams for food waste, recyclables and general waste.

One of the biggest challenges will be food waste so be sure to invest in a bin that will minimise health hazards and unwanted odours.

6 Re-train cleaning staff

Ensure cleaning staff are aware of the new waste separation requirements to avoid contamination and that offices are kept clean in the bins area due to the separation of food waste in case of spillages.
